Bullion – Comex Gold gained over 1% to above $2,705 per ounce and silver rose by 1.67%, following the Fed's decision to lower interest rates by 25 bps, aligning with expectations recovering some losses after Trump won US Presidential race. Following this decision, US Dollar dropped by 0.76% to 104.31 while the yield on the 10-year benchmark note fell by 10 basis points, settling at 4.33%. Meanwhile, initial jobless claims rising slightly from 218k to 221K, in line with expectations. In its policy statement, the Fed acknowledged the continued economic expansion but noted softening in the labor market. Inflation has progressed toward the Fed's 2% inflation goal, though remains elevated. Powell avoided committing to future rate changes, suggesting flexibility in upcoming decisions. Today, Comex Gold extends gains but heads for 2nd weekly fall. Now, the upcoming UoM Consumer Sentiment report and inflation expectations could influence gold's continued movement.

Crude Oil – WTI crude oil briefly surged above $72 per barrel as markets assessed the potential impact of a second Trump presidency, given his previous implementation of stricter sanctions on Iranian and Venezuelan oil exports during his first term. Additionally, the US Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement reported that over 22% of crude oil production, or 391,214 barrels per day, was shut in response to Hurricane Rafael in the US Gulf Coast. Although WTI crude has since dipped below $72 per barrel, it remains on track for a weekly gain. Market participants are closely monitoring further developments, especially regarding any stimulus measures from China's top legislative body and the ongoing effects of Trump's policies on the global oil market.

Natural Gas - NYMEX Henry Hub December futures fell 2% to $2.69 per mmBtu, pressured by a larger-than-expected increase in US natural gas stocks. EIA reported that US gas inventories rose by 69 billion cubic feet (Bcf) last week, significantly higher than the five-year average increase of 32 Bcf.

Base metals – LME metals made a sharp recovery yesterday, largely reversing the declines seen in the previous session, as the US dollar slipped from a four-month high of 105.4 to 104.2. Metals gained significant momentum amid growing expectations that China's government will introduce further economic support measures in response to offset potential tariffs likely to be imposed by the Trump administration in 2025. LME copper rebounded to $9,688 per tonne after hitting a six-week low of $9,302 on Wednesday, while zinc surged above $3,000 per tonne. Also, China's exports rose 12.7% yoy to $309 billion, marking the fastest growth since July 2022. Today, base metals are trading mixed amid expectations of a fiscal stimulus package from China's key legislative meeting and a softer US dollar.
